Energy for Life

CO-ENZYME Q-10 , a lipidic molecule is present in significant levels in human seminal fluid.

Seminal CoQ10 shows a direct correlation with seminal parameters(sperm count and

Seminal Oxidative stress :

- Correlates negatively with sperm concentration ,motility and function -adversely affecting fusion events required for fertilization.
- Linked with male factor infertility as it is known to contribute to defective spermatogenesis.

Globally CoQ10 is known for its unparalleled and immense role as a powerful antioxidant . It not only takes care of extrinsic free radicals but also neutralizes intrinsic free radicals .

CoQ10 Shows Significant Improvement In :

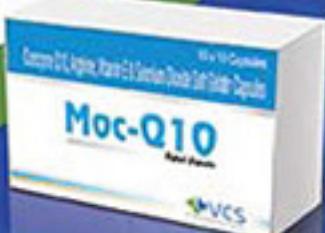

- Sperm density.
- Sperm motility (Idopathic asthenozoospermia and spermatozoa motility)
- Total antioxidant capacity of seminal plasma
- CoQ10 concentration in seminal plasma
- Improves ability of mitochondrial energy production for the maturing oocyte & developing embryo, thereby reducing the rate of chromosomal non disjunction & improving implantation.
- Reduces oxidative stress in IVF treated female for better embryo development
